Opening Session

Through and Beyond: How Latin America is Confronting COVID-19

The COVID-19 pandemic has presented significant challenges for the Latin America region, raising the question of how health systems can overcome emerging and systemic obstacles, and take advantage of opportunities to rebuild and prepare for future health crises. This opening session brings together a diverse panel of renowned experts to share insights on how the Latin America region can effectively confront and move beyond the pandemic. There will be a high-level overview of the regional landscape and situation, with presenters sharing how governments, multilateral organizations, private organizations, and academia work together to improve health outcomes and access. There will also be a discussion on the key role health economics and outcomes research (HEOR) is playing to support healthcare decision-making in prioritization of health investments and pricing and reimbursement of critical technologies, including COVID-19 therapies. Finally, how the health systems can ensure adequate integration of novel technologies in this challenging era will be explored from a multi-stakeholder perspective.
